

How You Were Identified

Based upon records secured from stock transfer agent, National Stock Transfer, Ogden, Utah, you were a holder of common stock in UniDyn Corp, a publically traded company whose shares were traded on the NASDAQ Bulletin Board under the trading symbol UNDY. UniDyn Corp had operations in Utah and Arizona and its stock was traded between 1997 and 2001.

The Fraud

In May of 2006, Ira Gentry and Randy Jenkins were indicted by a federal grand jury on 59 counts of conspiracy, securities and wire fraud, tax evasion and money laundering. The investigation by federal law enforcement agents revealed the following:

In December 1997, Ira Gentry merged his Phoenix based computer software business with a fully reporting public shell entity and formed a new Nevada corporation called UniDyn. UniDyn began trading on NASDAQ in early 1998. During the merger that formed UniDyn, Gentry secretly placed approximately 15,000,000 UniDyn shares into an offshore entity in order to disguise his true ownership in UniDyn. Gentry never disclosed in SEC filings, and on tax returns his true ownership and control of UniDyn. Shortly after going public, Gentry, who became the CEO of UniDyn, started pumping the stock through false and misleading press releases and SEC filings. Among the most blatant false information was that UniDyn was nearing development and had entered into a 200 million dollars contract to sell to a Japanese firm a new technology to test printed circuit boards for defects. The contract was non-existent and the technology wasn't even close to being developed. In 2000, after the stock was trading at several dollars per share, Gentry and Jenkins sold through two Canadian brokerage firms 3,000,000 shares of Gentry's undisclosed UniDyn holdings for $8,000,000.00. The brokerage accounts in Canada were opened using offshore entities, aliases, false passports and the assistance of Bahamian bank officials. The stock sales were not disclosed to the SEC or reported on tax returns. Randy Jenkins, a disbarred Arizona attorney, assisted Gentry in setting up the offshore entities used in the scheme, posted false and misleading information on the internet about UniDyn, and laundered a large portion of the monies through a series of transactions using domestic and offshore accounts. After the UniDyn fraud came to light in 2001, UniDyn stock became worthless.

On September 12, 2008, after a four week jury trial, Ira Gentry and Randy Jenkins were found guilty of 33 counts of conspiracy, securities and wire fraud, tax evasion and money laundering. Sentencing before the Honorable Judge Susan Bolton is scheduled for March 2, 2009.
